

ABSTRACT

A method of detecting bandwidth anomalies in a communication system involves receiving a first traffic waveform representing a time distribution of data volume in a first direction in the data communication system in a first period of time, producing a correlation value representing a correlation of the first traffic waveform with a reference waveform, and producing a bandwidth anomaly signal when the correlation value satisfies a criterion.